College Affordability: Financial Aid in the 21st Century

Mark Kantrowitz

Publisher and VP of Research, Savingforcollege.com

October 18, 2018

Highlights from the Affordability Workshop Sponsored by the College Counseling and Business Offices

Once again, BFS was very pleased to host expert Mark Kantrowitz on Oct. 18 for college affordability workshops for the parent body. In the 21st century, college financial planning means so much more than saving, borrowing, or applying for scholarships and financial aid. Mark's talk covered the full range of topics that all families need to know prior to the application process – the sooner, the better. These are: how much to save for college (the one-third rule), reasonable debt, how to borrow for college, cutting costs, applying for financial aid, measuring college affordability, education tax benefits, financial aid treatment of 529 plans, and more. All BFS parents are encouraged to download and save the PDF of College Affordability: Financial Aid in the 21st Century HERE. You may also access the presentation on the BFS website parent dashboard (sign-in with username & password required).

Advancement Report

Planting the Seeds for Growth

Many thanks to the parents, faculty and staff who have "planted the seeds" in the Brooklyn Friends Fund by making an early gift to support all areas of school operations and student life at BFS. Donations from many more generous stakeholders will help the fund grow throughout the seasons, until we reach our goal at the end of the fiscal year on June 30. Please consider making your pledge or your charitable gift to the fund today. Thank you.
